    <section>
        <h3>What is an environment?</h3>
        When we hear the word "environment," we often think of natural locations: forests, glaciers, and rivers. But any set of surroundings counts as an "environment," not just rural places that humans don't inhabit. The city, town, or other community you are in right now is an environment. Likewise, environmentalism is not only about preserving rural and wild ecosystems, but also the environments we all live in every day. We breathe the air, drink the water, and live on top of the soil. We are as vulnerable to floods, hurricanes, earthquakes, fires, and toxins as any other species. We don't need to live in forests to be a part of the natural world, both dependent upon it and influencing it.

<blockquote>This we know: the earth does not belong to man, man belongs to the earth. [...] Man did not weave the web of life, he is merely a strand in it. Whatever he does to the web, he does to himself. —Chief Seattle*</blockquote>

<section>
 <h3>How does justice apply to environments?</h3>
 Climate change and environmental degradation are everyone's problems—but they affect all of us in different ways.

Who breathes the toxic air, drinks the lead-filled water, and lives in areas that flood, burn, and are ravaged by hurricanes and earthquakes? Whose communities get hotter in the summer, have less trees and more pollution, and are—in short—deemed acceptable environmental sacrifices for the sake of profit?

<!-- Our conversations about unpacking the invisible knapsack of white privilege tend to focus on interpersonal relationships. But the relationship between people and environment, itself mediated through interpersonal relationships, is just as important. -->

Environmental justice seeks to expose and correct these disparities. It also seeks to harness them.

By empowering people on the front lines of environmental damage to protect their communities, we can create a network of activists stretching around the globe, each person bringing their unique knowledge and wisdom to a broad grassroots coalition.

Unchecked corporate activity that puts profits over people causes these problems. A people-powered, people-centered movement is necessary to fight them.

*Historians are not completely sure whether this was actually said by Chief Seattle.

<h3 id="NoOption">There is no option but justice.</h3>

<section id="principles">

<h3>Principles of Environmental Justice</h3>

Environmental Justice affirms the sacredness of Mother Earth, ecological unity and the interdependence of all species, and the right to be free from ecological destruction.

Environmental Justice demands that public policy be based on mutual respect and justice for all peoples, free from any form of discrimination or bias.

Environmental Justice mandates the right to ethical, balanced and responsible uses of land and renewable resources in the interest of a sustainable planet for humans and other living things.

Environmental Justice calls for universal protection from nuclear testing, extraction, production and disposal of toxic/hazardous wastes and poisons and nuclear testing that threaten the fundamental right to clean air, land, water, and food.

Environmental Justice affirms the fundamental right to political, economic, cultural and environmental self-determination of all peoples.

Environmental Justice demands the cessation of the production of all toxins, hazardous wastes, and radioactive materials, and that all past and current producers be held strictly accountable to the people for detoxification and the containment at the point of production.

Environmental Justice demands the right to participate as equal partners at every level of decision-making, including needs assessment, planning, implementation, enforcement and evaluation.

Environmental Justice affirms the right of all workers to a safe and healthy work environment without being forced to choose between an unsafe livelihood and unemployment. It also affirms the right of those who work at home to be free from environmental hazards.

Environmental Justice protects the right of victims of environmental injustice to receive full compensation and reparations for damages as well as quality health care.

Environmental Justice considers governmental acts of environmental injustice a violation of international law, the Universal Declaration On Human Rights, and the United Nations Convention on Genocide.

Environmental Justice must recognize a special legal and natural relationship of Native Peoples to the U.S. government through treaties, compacts, and covenants affirming sovereignty and self-determination.

Environmental Justice affirms the need for urban and rural ecological policies to clean up and rebuild our cities and rural areas in balance with nature, honoring the cultural integrity of all our communities, and provided fair access for all to the full range of resources.

Environmental Justice calls for the strict enforcement of principles of informed consent, and a halt to the testing of experimental reproductive and medical procedures and vaccinations on people of color.

Environmental Justice opposes the destructive operations of multi-national corporations.

Environmental Justice opposes military occupation, repression and exploitation of lands, peoples and cultures, and other life forms.

Environmental Justice calls for the education of present and future generations which emphasizes social and environmental issues, based on our experience and an appreciation of our diverse cultural perspectives.

Environmental Justice requires that we, as individuals, make personal and consumer choices to consume as little of Mother Earth's resources and to produce as little waste as possible; and make the conscious decision to challenge and reprioritize our lifestyles to ensure the health of the natural world for present and future generations.

<h2>How do we move forward?</h2>
<h2 id="vote">Vote down the ballot</h2>
<section>
  <h3>If you are allowed to vote, VOTE for politicians who will protect the enviroment and fight for equality.</h3> It is one of the easiest and most impactful things you can do. Vote in EVERY election, not just presidential ones. Vote for state senator, for board of education, for city council—all of it.
Local offices make more of a difference than you may think. State governments can make or break specific fights for justice. States can choose to keep enforcing climate restrictions when the federal government rolls them back, like California. Or they can declare states of emergency that facilitate calling in the National Guard on environmental protestors, as in North Dakota.
  Vote.org Vote.org (link above) can send you emails to remind you when an election is coming up so you don't forget. It can also help you register and find your polling place. Once you've voted, make sure your friends are voting, too.
Vote for those who can't and are depending on you to.
</section>

<h2 id="recycle">Do the small, easy things.</h2>
<section>
  <h3>Don't neglect the easy, everyday things.</h3>
  The actions of everyday people aren't to blame for climate change—corporations are. Buying an eco-friendly product to solve climate change is like taking a teaspoon of sand from a beach. However, sometimes it's so easy to pick the lesser of two climate change evils—but people still don't. For example, it takes the same amount of time and energy to throw paper, plastic, and glass into the recycle bin as to throw it in the garbage bin. So just recycle it!
If you and a friend are coming from the same place and going to the same place, go in the same vehicle. Reuse your plastic water bottle.
It won't solve the problem, but it's an easy, fast way to help just a little bit.

Particularly of importance is overconsumption. It's okay to enjoy material things. But before you buy, ask yourself, "In a year from now, will this purchase still be useful or make me happy? Or will the item end up buried in a drawer or a landfill by then?"</section>

<h2 id="protest">Speak up</h2><section>

<h3>Disrupt the status quo.</h3>

This doesn't have to take the form of a big protest, although it certainly can. Systems of injustice function largely through silence, through the belief of the perpetrators that they are in the silent majority.

Anything to rupture that comfort and show the perpetrators that people do care about the earth and about oppressed communities will be useful. Write letters to politicians or newspapers. Run an awareness campaign in your community. Perform a relevant work of art. Stage a die-in or a day (or minute) of silence. Do what you can to make your stance known.</section>

<h2 id="community">Build community</h2><section>

<h3>Hold radical empathy for others and for yourself.</h3>

Since this fight involves all of us, we should embrace its ability to bring us together to build coalitions around common goals. In fact, we can't do this without each other. Taking care of each other is perhaps the most radical thing any of us can do.

There's no need to reinvent the wheel as we join this fight. Other people have useful information, resources, wisdom, connections, and infrastructure for change already set up. If you don't know what to do, find a group that already has something figured out and help with their goals until you have your own ideas. A few suggestions for groups are included on this site under "Activist groups".

Remember that burning out is exactly what fossil fuel and other industries would like for us to do.</section>

<blockquote>A choir can sing a beautiful note impossibly long because singers can individually drop out to breathe as necessary and the note goes on. Social justice activism should be like that.</blockquote>

<section class="noRed">

(Source)</section><section>

<h3>Learn from abroad, but focus on home.</h3>

Your campaign to save the Amazon from your hometown in the USA will likely not be as successful as a campaign to stop a pipeline from being built in your state. Problems that people can see with their own eyes usually have more impact than problems that are far away.

Remember that the USA is responsible for a great deal of the world's pollution. This is a problem that begins and frequently ends right where you live.

</section>

<section>

<h3>We need all sorts.</h3>

It isn't realistic to assume that any one style of activism works for everyone in a sustainable way. This is a great thing, because the people we're trying to reach are as diverse as we are. YOUR specific style is exactly what is needed to reach your specific audience. And if you enjoy doing it, you'll be able to help for longer.

Great listener? Provide emotional support for activists. Got extra money? Donate it. In a leadership position at an institution? Make sure that institution is following high environmental and equity standards. Good with data and numbers? Collect some empirical evidence activists can use to prove their points. Naturally optimistic? Share your hope and reassurance. Storyteller or artist? Tell environmental justice stories and make environmental justice art. Good at gardening? Garden in your community. Good at teaching? Teach! Whatever you do best and most naturally, find a way to harness it.

</section>

<blockquote>Move forward whichever way is best for YOU. What can you contribute towards environmental justice that other people can't? What are YOU good at?</blockquote>

    <h3>Towards a Radical Internet: Rejecting Surveillance</h3>
    I believe in an open-source, advertisement free information highway. I believe your attention is a privilege, not a commodity, and as such, I reject algorithm-based content designed to tell you whatever will keep you scrolling. I believe technology can be a tool for beauty, equity, and creation, and that if it stops serving such purposes, we should all be luddites at least a little bit. I believe in dismantling surveillance capitalism and restoring independence and fun to the internet. This is why I did not create a social media profile. Social media might wind up getting more views and shares—but at what cost?
Your interaction with the profile would mean more data and therefore money in the hands of the very billionaires we aspire to fight against. Here, Zuckerberg can't get you. I'm not placing any trackers or cookies on you—I wouldn't know how to do that even if I wanted to. You're free. In code we have complete creative control. We are not bound by word limits, algorithms, or conventions altogether. Not to mention: image-driven social media platforms are an accessibility nightmare. This webpage could be navigated using a screen-reader (for the visually impaired), and the tab key (for those with motor issues). Due to time constraints, right now the site is not accessible in these ways—but in another week, I could make it be.

Amateur, independent web design is for the revolution. You can learn how to code your own website below for free.

<h3>Design Philosophy</h3>

I wanted to aesthetically subvert the assumption that climate change and other environmental crises affect primarily distant plants and animals and instead emphasize the role of people. To do this, I chose photos that prominently feature people and urban environments.

To continue this logic to the color scheme, I purposely stayed far away from the blues and greens that I found most other environmentalist and environmental justice websites using and instead picked a color scheme that felt fresh and urban. Black and white, styled with bold sans-serif fonts, felt modern, sleek, and eye-catching. I added bright red for a splash of color, and because of its connotations with radicalness. Putting photos in grayscale helped reduce clutter and make the red pop.
